What Might Have Been.

My boytsh eyes her il pe above,
Her childly breath upon my cheek;
Her childly breath upon my cheek;
That lips and eyes alone may speak,
And O, it seems but yesterday
Each heart was nestling by its iwin
While all the long year seem to ay—
What might have been—what might have been.

What might have been had both been one,
That love on earth and love beyond,
That sets to rise, like circling am,
The faith that faiters not in death,
The hope that endless life would win.
How comes to us the past and sath.
What might have been—what might have been.

Some withered leaves recall the flowers,
Bonns miken threads of hair are left;
It is no harn to call them our;
Though all that mide them ours bereft.
And so we waik the parted ways.
That meet where loving is no sio;
and so we dream of years and days,
That might have been—that might have been.

the horizon hung clear and bright as a sliver line on the surface of the lake; but to the west there sprung and finshed, as to the music of a reatless dame, the play of the summer lightnings.—Beautiful and vivid in gleams of fire the electric currents glowed like animated things, sometimes leaping to the senith, and then sinking down with a sort of caress to the ruffled waters, as if husbing the moan of the minature sea. But in the southeast, away from the airy strife, higher and wider was a semi-circle of bloed, it rose to the arch of the bow-like sky, veiling the moon that peeped from rifts of clouds. Motionless, like the sacred face of a lady, it hung between the storm and the bright sky in the east. Like Artemis watching the battle of the Titons looked the moon in this revel of the lightnings, and the gleam of the billiows flashing in flame. The tremnlous waters gave out a moan like a spirit in distress, and the heart feit chill as the ear took in the mournful sound. The storm rose fiercer, and the lightning flashed in wilder desolution. Vived and red they shot up in the sky, and the wind rose up and lashed the billiows to foam—a foam that sparkled and shimmered in the red light of the sky like molten gold.

lows to foam—a foam that sparkled and shimmered in the red light of the sky like molten gold.

Few; were abroad that night. A single yacht was out on the Lake, a mile from shore. It was anchored there, and the dark buil ross and feil with the heave of the water. Suddenly a fluttering ripple appeared on the Lake. It gathered strength as it came and rushed into billiows that ran with the speed of the wind. It struck the small dark boat that careened to its lorce like a reed bent by the blast.

Just then a man and woman appeared on the deck, the one trembling and frightened, the other dark and stern. Their forms could be seen in the light of the sky, in the gleam of the lighting as it played on the Lake.

From the verandah of the hotel, two men sat and watched them. Despite the wind and the breath of the tempest that rushed in their faces, their eyes were bent on the vessel that rocked two.

'Wait and see,' was the caim reply.

What object could he have in anchoring the vessel there but an evil one?!

His companion did not seem to hear him, so carneally was he tooking out raged around it. Suddenly he turned and said:

'Have the men got the boat ready?

Quick, there is no time to lose!' and the wo men rushed out of the house, and

Quick, there is no time to lose!' and the two men rushed out of the house, and down to the beach.

At sunset the yacht had left the pler at the Lake End ostensibly for a sail of a few hours. It bore two persons—a man and woman. They were both young and comparative strangers in New Orleans. Two weeks before they had come here from the North. Strange that almost from the day of their arrival they had fallen under the suspicion and surveilance of the police. Some said the lady was insane, and the man wished to get rid of her. But how this was known it would be impossible to say. They knew no one, formed no acquaintances, and lived secluded, Yet it is true that all their inovements were watched, and the two detectives that as upon the gallery that night were always near him.

The evening of which we speak they had gone to the Lake. The yacht had been purchased by the man a week before. Arriving there, he had been warned not to go out. A storm was brewing, they told him, and he would be unable to manage his vessel. He laughed at this, and said there was no danger.

The detective said nothing, but watched him carefully. For an hour or two he sailed around in sight, but the storm began to rise, the vessel layto, and the anchor dropped out.

he storm began to rise, the vessel lay o, and the anchor dropped out.

What could it mean?

He had plenty of time to reach the shore in safety. What motive had he for risking the frail vessel out in the storm? Reaching the small boat they had in readiness, the detectives jumped in and ordered the men to pull for the yacht They had nearly reached it when ordered the men to pull for the yacht. They had nearly reached it when a wild acream broke out upon the air. It was the cry of a woman in mortal agony. At that moment the flash of the lightnings revealed a female struggling with the water, and a man bending over the railing of the yacht watching her calmly.

The next moment the anchor wan weighed, the sall was set and the vessel reaked by them on its way to land.

A few vigorous strokes of the oars brought them up to the spot where the woman was seen. A moment atter she lay in the bottom of the boat, wet and drenched and apparently lifeless.

The man had already reached the hotel and told his tale. His wife had fallen overboard and was drowned. He appeared to be wild with griefreproaching himself for going out on the lake, and then crying as if his heart would break. His counterfeit ansulab would have imposed upon any one who had not seen his treathery.

The men brought the woman back, but took her to another botel, where steps were taken to revive her. After this she was taken rapidly back to the detectives was quietly watching the man whose angulah appeared so excessive. Several times the stranger eyed the officer suspiciously; but recollecting himself, a new outburst of grief excited the company advanced the man's frenzy toned down. It was then the officer custody.

'Arrest me, sir! Arrest me for what?
'For attempting to drown your wife.

For attempting to drown your wife.'

'Attempting l'
'Yes, attempting, You did not succeed, She has been rescued.'
The man stared at him from eyes that grew wild with fright, and a deadly rew wild with fright, and a deadly alor crept into his face. His lips work d as if with a spasm; and he murmur d between his shut teeth, the simple word Resough! word 'Rescued!'
'Yee, rescued,'
'Them, I'm lost!' and the cool, calcu-lating villain stood convicted by his own confession, H-burney own confession.: H-binession fate, He It is useless to trace his after fate, He was tried and condemned—the would-be assussin of his wife.

A doop joke is told of a young man who attended a social circle a few evenings since. The conversation turned on Californias and getting rich. Tom — remarked that if he was in California he would, instead of working in the mines, waylay some rich man who had a bag of gold, knock out his brains, gather up the gold, and sheaddle. One of the young ladies quietly replied that he had better gather up the brains, as he syldenily stood in more need of that article than gold. Tom subsided.

NEAR Fort Byron, New York, there is a large and flourishing pear tree which is a curiosity. Some years since, its owner covered the roots with straw as a protection against cold weather. When the straw was removed it was found that a family of moles had made it their habitation, and in the natural depravity of their instincts had passed their time in guswing the bark from the tree, stripping it clean below the straw, with the exception of a few inches on one side. The owner, being possessed of an inventive turn of mind, determided to save the tree if possible, and he has succeeded. He cut from the tree several healty and promising spronts, and bending them in the form of a creacest, grafted an end of each in the body of the tree above and below this girdle. Now the tree is healthy above and below the spot, while beneath the sprouts the trunk is dead and decaying. The sprouts have, of course, increased in size, and the owner counfdentially expects they will be able to sustain the weight of the tree by the time the trunk has decayed through to the healthy side. The top is filled with an unusually large quantity of fruit.

RESCUED.

Midnight Adventure in New Gricans.

It was a stormy night at the Lake End. Fierce thunder clouds hung overhead, full of incessant fire, blazing out into long streamers on the midnight aky; radiant in eccentric ploturings, gloomy and grand, as is ever a war of the stements. Far to the east of the horizon hung clear and bright as aliver line on the surface of the lake; but to the west there sprung and fisshed, as to the music of a reatless dance, the play of the summer lightnings.

Beautiful and vivid in gleams of dire been the electric currents glowed like animated things, sometimes leaping to the senith, and then slocking down with a way. away.

BROTHER W—, a Presbyterian minister, said that early in his ministry he and a Brother H— were conducting a meeting, in which there was much religious interest. An old man gave expression to his joy by shouting, and continued it until it began to interrupt the services. "Brother H—," said to brother W—, "Go stop that old man's noise," He went to him and spoke a few words, and the shouting man at once became quiet. Brother W— asked Brother H—, "What did you say to the old man that quieted him so prompily?" Brother H— replied, "I asked him for a dollar for foreign missions."

A NoveL spectacle was witnessed at the Springfield street chappl, in Boston, last Sunday morning: Alpheus Chapin, father of Rev. Dr. Chapin, now eighty-two years old, recently had a fall which lamed him, so that he goes unit which lamed him, so that he goes up and down stairs with difficulty, and he was aided out of the chappel by Father Cleveland, who is ninety-eight and another spry veteran one hundred years old.

'Hans, where were you born?' 'On der Halderbarrack,' 'What, always?, 'Yah, and before too,' 'How old are you, then?' 'Vi, when the old school house is plit I was two weeks more nor a year, what is painted red, as you go before mit your pack behind you, on der rite hand side de blacksmith shop, what stans where it was purnt down next year will pe two weeks.'

A FEW days ago a gentieman lost a thousand dollar diamond pin on War-ren bridge, Boston. The boy of a poor woman found the pin, and the mother made known the fact to a feweller, through whom the pin was restored to red, with the addition of five dol-more for the benefit of the woman "FRESH AS A MAIDEN'S BLUSH"-IS

WOUNG MEN
Who have injured themselves by a certain practice, indulged in when alone, a habit frequently learned from evil companions, or at school, the effects of which are nightly feit, even when asleep, and, if not cured, renders marriage impossible, and destroys both mind and body, should apply immediately.
What a pity that a young man, the hope of his country, the pride of his parents, should be snatched from all prospects and enjoyments of life by the consequence of devisating from the path of nature, and indulging in a certain secret habit. Such persons must, before contemplating

MARHIAGE, reflect that a sound mind and body are the most necessary requisites to promote commibial happiness. Indeed, without these the journey through life becomes a weary pilgrimage; the prospect hourly darkens to the view, the mind becomes shadowed with despair and filled with the melancholy reflection that the happiness of another become blighted with our own.
